WHAT'S IT ABOUT ?

How people move to, from, and around Cookstown shapes how they experience the town. At the heart of Northern Ireland, Cookstown is naturally a regional hub. While its central location and strong main street are major strengths, traffic congestion and limited transport options can make access and movement challenging. With the bypass on the horizon, there is an opportunity to reimagine how the town works for people - making it easier to navigate, more accessible to all, and better connected to surrounding landscapes and neighbouring towns. Strengthening connections, both locally and regionally, will help Cookstown flourish as a welcoming, well-connected hub at the centre of Mid Ulster.
